Food, Power, and Politics

Nakazato, Hiroshi

Summer 2024

This course will seek to provide an intellectual and analytical-driven framework around the question of food as an integral part of any human experience, but particularly our experience with food through across cultures. We each have a unique opportunity to understand better the role of food in each of our lives as we move through this summer program by examining our own cultural and political assumptions and those of others from a new point of view. We can appreciate the lenses brought by other individuals, cultures and places to the acts of eating and producing food. Finally, we can express the human experience of food in ways that represent our understandings, experiences and vision for a healthy, just and pleasurable relationship to food in ways that can be shared and appreciated by others. In eating and producing food, we exist simultaneously in a deeply personal and communal place, a place of the present, past and future in which we are never more and less than human.

Aspects of Economic Growth

Ozkara, Yusuf

Summer 2024

This course aims at providing both the theory and empirics of modern economic growth theories. In addition to Classical and Neoclassical economic growth approaches, current views such as endogenous growth theory will be discussed. Emphasis will be placed on why some countries lag behind others and ways to solve this problem. The factors that are affecting economic growth such as technology, capital accumulation, change in employment, education, human capital, saving, energy consumption, democracy are studied in detail. The course also addresses the role of financial markets and policy formulation of economic growth.

Contentious History and the Politics of Contemporary Korea

Hwang, Ingu

Summer 2024

This introductory immersion course surveys the contentious intersection between history and politics in contemporary Korea. Students will explore the following questions: What were the critical historical experiences and issues that became part of the public discourse and catalyzed political contestations in local and international/global communities? Why did these issues become contentious and for whom? What actions and counteractions did they inspire? In critically examining these questions, students will address four topics: postcolonial disputes, national division, economic development and social justice, and (post-)democratization protests. To facilitate in-class discussions, students need to engage critically with textual and media sources. They are also required to actively participate in the historical and cultural immersion/excursion programs, including the National Museum of Korean Contemporary History, the DMZ tour, and the Kim Dae-jung Presidential Library and Museum.

Research Methods in Political Science

Krause, Peter J

Summer 2024

Rigorous, systematic research methods are at the foundation of quality scholarship for students and professors alike, but many students find research methods scary and/or boring to learn. This class will introduce students to a wide array of research methods in an engaging, accessible way. Students will get hands-on training in how to ask good question, generate their own original arguments, define and measure their concepts, and set up and carry out sophisticated research designs. Along the way, students will learn the basics of archival research, interviews, surveys, case studies, and statistical analysis. The course focuses on applied methods using scholarship and examples from political science, international studies, history, psychology, and sociology. The course is designed for students to write the best paper they have ever written. Every week, student assignments are learning and applying one of these skills to their paper project, so that by the end of the semester they have a well-written, original research paper with an engaging question, well framed arguments, and in-depth comparative case study analysis. This is a great course for students thinking about writing a thesis, pursuing a research-focused career, or for those who simply want to supercharge their analytical skills, in this class and in others.

Where on Earth: Foundations in Global Culture & Political Geography

Getzoff, Joseph

Fall 2024

Restricted for rising sophomores, International Studies MajorsWhere on Earth introduces you to the International Studies Program, offering you different approaches to analyzing geographic and historic phenomena in order to understand our current world. Where on Earth: Foundations in Political Geography and Global Cultures draws from the way that the discipline of Geography and the other social sciences understand the production of politics and culture as both locally and globally contingentthat is, no phenomena are discretely produced within the bounds of the nation-state, while simultaneously they reflect localized histories, cultures, and political-economy. We will engage with many themes and topics that explore the structural and interconnected causes of global issues: we will look at histories of colonialism and how they reverberate into the present, at the institutions of borders and nation-states, how economic systems shape our world, how different ideas about race, gender, and class are intertwined with local and global cultural and social forces, developmental policy and debate, the science and politics of climate change, and engage with critical questions of environmental and social justice in an ever changing and globalized world. We will not focus on any one region, instead opting for a global survey of cases that will allow us to critically interrogate the uneven production of space and strive to understand different approaches to addressing global inequality. Students will complete a number of reading reflections and two exams, and work with their peers on collaborative assignments.

Concepts, Cases, and Contexts of Nationalism

Prodromou, Elizabeth

Fall 2024

The phenomenon of nationalism has changed the course of world history and continues to shape current patterns of international relations. This course explores the foundations of nationalismits European origins, global dissemination, local expressions; its inclusivist expressions giving pride of place to human dignity, freedom, and equality before the law, and its exclusivist expressions built on ascriptive categories of race and ethnicity; its drivers of violence in ending and reconsolidating empires; and its connections to religion, memory, and heritage. The course covers a broad range of cases, drawing on inter-disciplinary literatures, engagement with guest experts, and contemporary media analyses.

Political Geography and Geopolitics

Nakazato, Hiroshi

Fall 2024

This course provides an understanding of the fields of political geography and geopolitics, which are the study of how politics organizes space and how space influence politics. We will discuss key political geographic concepts including territory, sovereignty, borders, and place, and their history and changing relevance in the face of capitalist globalization and the transition from empires to nation-states. We will also explore three major facets of geopolitics: classic geopolitics, critical geopolitics, and urban geopolitics and their relevance in the contemporary world. Finally, we will explore geographies of peace and conflict and the rise of non-state actors and non-state sovereignty.

Is All Commerce Capitalism? Global Histories of Production, Exchange, and Power

Kent, Stacie A

Fall 2024

Fulfills the LAMA Requirement for History Majors Adam Smith famously wrote of "a certain propensity in human nature...to truck, barter, and exchange." Less than a century later Karl Marx observed that capitalism "cannot exist without constantly revolutionizing...the whole relations of society." This course examines both these propositions, asking what role exchange has played in human societies and in what sense capitalism is revolutionary. We study a global range of ancient, medieval, and modern trade networks, modes of production, and social meanings in and around exchange. We investigate connections trade fostered and where power inhered in the production, distribution, and consumption of goods.

Global Horizons beyond Boston College: Integrating Ethics, Economics, and the Common Good

Erbil, Can

Fall 2024

This seminar is ideal for seniors in the Economics and International Studies programs, aiming to apply their accumulated academic knowledge and their Boston College experience in a complex global context. "Global Horizons" invites students to explore the intricate interplay between global economic systems and ethical considerations, emphasizing a multidisciplinary approach that integrates insights from environmental science, public policy, sociology, psychology, and more. The course will emphasize the Common Good, social well-being and the pursuit of a just society. Throughout the course, students will engage with advanced economic theories and models, applying them to analyze and propose solutions to pressing global issues such as international trade, labor practices, and sustainable development. The course challenges students to consider the ethical dimensions of economic policies and practices, connecting their entire academic journey to Boston College's commitment to moral discernment and the Common Good, one last time before they graduate and start to make their own mark in the world beyond The Heights.

Human Rights in East Asia

Hwang, Ingu

Fall 2024

This course introduces students to the post-1945 development of global human rights talk, activism, and politics from an East Asian perspective. Through an examination of specific conflicts over self-determination and sovereignty, economic development and disparity, democratization, the legacies of decolonization, and global justice and environment, the course delves into how and why actors in China, Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea, and North Korea translated local struggles into international human rights agendas that gained attention on the global stage. In exploring this process of translation and appropriation, we will also analyze how these local conflicts transformed international human rights issues. Comparative Economic Systems

Medlin, Aaron M

Fall 2024

Capitalism is not a monolithic system but varies significantly across space and time due to distinct historical, cultural, and institutional contingencies. By understanding these variances, students gain a nuanced view of capitalism beyond its liberal market-centered instantiation in the U.S. This course explores the diverse forms of capitalism and other economic systems (e.g., socialistic command economies in the former Soviet Union, the state-centric model of China, etc.) from a comparative perspective. Students will engage with key concepts in comparative political economy, institutional economics, and economic sociology. The course provides a comprehensive understanding of how politics, culture, and historical evolution shape national economic systems in the global economy.

Wars and Revolutions in the Middle East

Kadivar, Mohammad Ali

Fall 2024

Embark on a gripping exploration with 'Wars and Revolutions in the Middle East', a course that delves into the pivotal events that have shaped one of the world's most dynamic regions. This journey begins with the colonial conflicts of the early 20th century, tracing the emergence of national borders and the profound disputes that continue to resonate today. Engage with a diverse curriculum that spans political science, history, international relations, and sociology offering a window into the transformative wars and revolutions that have defined the Middle East. From the Algerian war for independence to the influential Iranian, Egyptian, Tunisian, and Sudanese revolutions, and the persistent Kurdish insurgency in Turkey, you will examine the forces that have forged nations and ignited global discourse. This course not only charts a historical timeline but also challenges you to dissect the major theories of revolution and conflict. By analyzing the nuanced layers of the ongoing struggles, such as those in Palestine, you'll develop a multifaceted perspective on the socio-political undercurrents that continue to shape the Middle East. 'Wars and Revolutions in the Middle East' is more than a course it's an intellectual odyssey that sharpens your ability to think critically about complex global issues. It promises to leave you with a profound understanding of the narratives that have driven the Middle East's past and are still crafting its future.

International Law

Nakazato, Hiroshi

Fall 2024

This course examines the role of international public law (the "law of nations") in the world today. It takes as its starting point the academic (and practical) debate about the utility of international law in world politics. From there, we consider the philosophical foundations of law, the sources of international law, and the application of international law in different arenas. In particular, the course will focus on how international law deals with a number of issues, including the connection between domestic and international law and the laws on territory, jurisdiction, human rights, and security, as well as other relevant topics.

The Arab-Israeli Conflict

Krause, Peter J

Fall 2024

This course is class-restricted to sophomores, juniors, and seniors. The Hamas attacks on October 7, 2023 and the subsequent Israeli invasion of Gaza are only the latest tragic chapters in the ongoing Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The broader struggle, which involves not just Israelis and Palestinians, but also regional states like Egypt, Syria, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia, has been at the core of Middle East politics over the past century. But the character and outcomes of this conflict have varied significantly across time and space. This course will address the origins, dynamics, and effectiveness of Zionism and Palestinian nationalism, the causes of war and peace, and changes in territorial and political control of the region from the early 1900s to the present. Students will learn and analyze the perspectives and behaviors of state and non-state actors on all sides to gain a greater appreciation for a struggle that continues to drive regional dynamics and U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East. By the conclusion of the course, students will emerge not only with a far richer understanding of the region, its people, and its politics, but also as more sophisticated consumers, analysts, and producers of knowledge.

Orthodox Christianity in Global Context

Fall 2024

Orthodox Christianity has emerged as a subject of worldwide interest largely within the current context of Russias war in Ukraine, yet Orthodoxys 2000-year history and global scope extend far beyond the present historical conjuncture. This seminar uses social science and historical approaches, insights from policy experts and faith leaders, to provide a broad introduction to Orthodox Christianity in global context. The seminar explores internal and external factorsgeopolitical, institutional, and religious that help to explain scholarly neglect and policymaking unfamiliarity with an ancient faith tradition and that elucidate Orthodoxys responses to issues of pluralism, human rights, war, and peace.

Geographies of Nature and the Environment

Getzoff, Joseph

Spring 2025

The study of the environment is urgently important in an era of global climatic change. Geography and other social sciences have long offered critical ways to understand the entangled relationship of humans and their physical environment. This course is an introduction to the many ways to think critically about this relationship, drawing from a robust body of scholarly debate. The course will engage with many topics that explore the significance of the environment in relation to human societies: we will look at the construction of nature as a foundational idea in human cultures, the intersection of economies and ecologies, the histories and legacies of colonial environments, political ecology and conflicts over resources, the shaping of the non-human animal, the science and politics of climate change, and engage with critical questions of environmental justice in an ever changing and globalized world. We will not focus on any one region, instead opting for a global survey of cases that will allow us to critically interrogate the meaning of nature and the environment in relation to human societies past, present, and future.

This course is an introduction to democratization in the Middle East, using social science literatures on regime type (e.g. democratic, authoritarian, totalitarian, hybrid) to explore how history, geopolitics, and leadership shape comparative experiences of democratization in the region. The course considers democratization patterns shaped by disputes over tradeoffs between security versus pluralism and equality before the state, tensions between economic equity and growth, and competition between religious versus secular forms of nationalism. Through case studies (e.g. Egypt, Turkey, Israel, Palestine, Iran, Syria) and engagement with regional and international scholar-practitioners, the course situates the region within current debates about democracy worldwide.

Comparative Politics of Populism and Migration in Europe

Molles, Elitsa V

Spring 2025

Have all European polities and societies become liberal after post-communist transitions? How have populist parties across the Continent transformed discourses, politics, and individual identities? How do race and exclusion of ethnic, religious, or other minorities figure into Europeans' everyday lives? How has migration uprooted social realities across Europe? The course will answer these questions and more through the lens of identity politics. It will trace and analyze the multiple transformations in Western and Eastern European politics and societies in the contemporary period, through a mix of theoretical texts, current case studies, and non-academic sources.

Environmental Politics of the Middle East

Getzoff, Joseph

Spring 2025

This course will critically explore the contemporary and historical environmental issues associated with the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) in order to understand the relationship between nature, politics, colonialism, culture, and geography. First, the course will interrogate the geographic label, Middle East, to understand how American and European literature, politics, and culture created different bodies of knowledge and replicated popular discourses that justify intervention in West/Southwest Asia and North Africa. Understanding the Middle East as a geographical construction also allows us to critically think through how environmental issues are interconnected with the global and localized histories of colonialism, imperialism, and empire. Students will read and discuss scholarship on development, postcolonial theory, environmental history, and political ecology. Throughout the semester, students will complete a project on a topic of their choosing, developing it from start to finish with instructor and peer feedback.

International Economic Relations

Anderson, James

Spring 2025

Not open to students who have taken ECON3371 or ECON3372.. This course introduces the study of economic relations among countries. It combines material contained in ECON3371 and ECON3372, and substitutes for both those courses. Primarily designed for international studies majors, it is also appropriate for economics and other social science majors, with the proviso that the comprehensive coverage of the course implies that the workload is heavy and expectations for students are high. Topics include the determinants of trade in goods, services, and capital; the economic policies that nations use to influence such trade; the theory and practice of international macroeconomics; and problems of coordinating macroeconomic policies among countries. The course features the usefulness (and limitations) of game theory for explaining international economic interactions.

Comparative Revolutions

Kadivar, Mohammad Ali

Spring 2025

What are revolutions? Why do they happen? How do they happen? What are their consequences? This course critically engages with these questions, and reviews the main answers presented in the social scientific literature on the revolutions. In addition to a theoretical understanding of the revolutionary processes, the course also presents case studies of some of the classic examples of revolutions such as the Haitian and Russian revolution, as well as more recent revolutions such as the uprisings in the Arab World. Through reviewing the literature and case studies, we also examine how the meanings and dynamics of the revolutions have changed from the early 20th century to the 21st century.

Korean War: Conflict, Security, and Peace

Hwang, Ingu

Spring 2025

The Korean War (1950-1953) began as a civil war but became a global conflict against the backdrop of the emerging Cold War era. Known as "the Forgotten War" in the U.S., this conflict resulted in 5 million deaths and left an indelible imprint on the world. Seven decades later the Korean peninsula remains divided, and the contentious international security mechanisms engendered by this conflict still shape East Asian relations and U.S. foreign policy. Through engagement with recent historical works, this seminar course will explore the origins and legacies of this conflict, security options and limitations, and conditions and visions of peace. This course fulfills the LAMA requirement for History majors.

Pandemics and Global Health Diplomacy

Rodrigues, Miguel

Spring 2025

This course reviews successive outbreaks of infectious diseases on the scale of epidemics and pandemics, from BSE (Mad Cow Disease), SARS, Avian and Pandemic Influenza, and MERS-Cov, to Ebola, Zika, and the recently contained Covid-19 pandemic, with the view toward analyzing the political and public health responses, the expansions in global health response capacity, the development and implementation of the International Health Regulations, and global health diplomacy efforts such as the Global Health Security Agenda (GHSA) that helped countries prevent and respond to infectious disease outbreaks. The course will end with a discussion on the international Pandemic Agreement currently under negotiation, which is struggling to balance pathogen sample access and benefits sharing, two objectives of critical importance to the Industrialized West and the Global South respectively.

A History of Food Globalization

Nakazato, Hiroshi

Spring 2025

This seminar examines the connections between food and power, and explores how social explanations work. Humanity's quest for food has shaped the development of societies in many ways, influencing population growth and urban expansion, dictated economic and political theories, expanded the horizons of commerce, inspired wars of conquest, and the discovery of new worlds. We look at how the acquisition, preparation, and consumption of food affects relations within and across societies, from the beginning of recorded time to today.

War and Genocide

Pendas, Devin O

Spring 2025

Genocide has been one of the most tragic and disturbing global phenomena of the twentieth century. It has been truly global in scope, striking Asia, Africa, the Americas and Europe. In this course, we will explore the history of genocide and its relationship to war in global perspective, from the colonial genocides of the 19th century, the Armenian genocide in WW I, the Holocaust in WWII and the postcolonial genocides since 1945. We will also ask what might be done on an international level to combat genocide - either through military intervention or through legal prosecution.

Spring 2025

Fulfills the LAMA Requirement for History Majors Amidst the current U.S. opioid epidemic, this course investigates how the pursuit of profit has intersected with constructions of health, illness, and social vice. Where and how have states and societies supported or tolerated widespread narcotic use? By the same token, what social, economic, and political processes transform use into social shame or criminal behavior? The course will look at the centuries-long opium trade between British India and China, the early history of commercial opioids around the world, and compare two U.S. epidemics in their global and local dimensions crack cocaine in the 1980s and opioids in the 2000s.
