PHIL125201

Practical Logic

Boessenkool, Anna D

Summer 2024

A course not in the "new logic" (symbolic, or mathematical, logic) but in the "old logic" (ordinary language logic) invented by Aristotle and used for 2300 years in all the humanities. Includes such topics as definition, contradiction, syllogisms, implied premises, induction, and analogy. The course includes the commonsensical philosophical bases for this logic and also many practical applications to reading, interpreting, evaluating, and inventing arguments, especially in dialogs.

PHIL327501

Ethics of MigrationSweeney, Eileen C*Summer 2024

The course deals with migration as a topic for philosophical and theological reflection. We will consider key concepts related to migration--e.g., citizen, migrant, human rights, nation. We will examine debates over whether limits on migration are justifiable. We will also pay special attention to rights and duties concerning refugees. The course will take place in Mexico, first in Mexico City and then in Tijuana, just a few miles from the U.S.-Mexico border. We will use the Mexican context--including both Mexican history and present realities--as a way of making concrete the philosophical and theological discussion of migration. For millennia, Mexico has been a place of migration and settlement by different peoples. And each year, hundreds of thousands of people move in and out of Mexico for a variety of reasons. Moreover, the U.S.-Mexico border is an issue of intense debate in both the U.S. and Mexico. Thus Mexico provides an excellent context for thinking about: (1) the big picture of migration as a human phenomenon, (2) the historical forces that have shaped, and continue to shape, patterns of migration, and (3) the contemporary situation of migrants and contemporary policies toward migration. Our goal is to combine philosophical/theological reflection with cultural immersion in a mutually illuminating way. The Mexican context will help make our philosophical/theological discussions of migration more vivid, nuanced, and realistic.

Perspectives on Art I: Crisis, Courage, and Creativity

Rumble, Vanessa P

Fall 2024

Ways of thinking, and ways of doing philosophy, have arisen, again and again, in response to historical and intellectual crises. In the attempt to glimpse and conceptualize what is real, philosophy has elaborated and embraced new ways to see and understand the reality (metaphysical and socio-political) around us and the human life that we must live. Understood in this way, philosophy is always a call to courage and creativity. In this year-long course in philosophy, paired with courses on art and literature offered by Professors Burns and Epstein, we will study the history of western philosophy, keeping an eye on the way in which philosophy comports itself in relation to the bodily and the sensual and, in the second semester, more and more explicitly and thematically, in relation to art and beauty. Fall semester will focus on Greek tragedy, the classical philosophy of Plato and Aristotle, St. Augustine's attempt to echo rhetorically the notion of a Truth that concerns itself with time, and political theorists (Machiavelli, Locke and Rousseau) who usher us to the threshold of the Romantic era, where our second semester commences. The pair course structure and the evening reflections allow us the space and time to pursue this intellectual work within a community.

The Self and its Limits: Classical and Contemporary Perspectives

Moran, Dermot

Fall 2024

This is an Enduring Question course and is open to FRESHMEN only. You must take CLAS1706 with this course. What is the relationship between the individual self and its social roles? These paired courses examine what factors make us free individuals and how that freedom has historically been removed from certain people. One course will explore the nature of the self in historical and contemporary perspectives from East and West to look at the nature of self-consciousness and personhood. The other will investigate how ancient Greeks and Romans justified the enslavement of individuals for material gain and how ancient slavery influenced American society both in terms of its use of slave-labor and in the arguments made for abolition.

Fall 2024

This is an Enduring Question course and is open to FRESHMEN only. You must take THEO1729 with this course. What does it mean to be virtuous and why does it matter? These courses will consider what it means to be virtuous and how that contributes to living a flourishing life. Both courses begin with ancient texts -- the Bible and writings of Plato and Aristotle -- and introduce students to foundational ethical and religious notions of virtue. Each course, in its own distinctive manner, will invite students to think about how notions of virtue relate either to famous literary figures (Philosophy course) or to the works of later philosophers and theologians (Theology course). The texts of Plato and Aristotle will serve as a point of connection between the two courses.

Philosophy and Theology of Community I

Sweeney, Meghan T

Fall 2024

This seminar explores the nature of community, with particular focus on community in the American context. Some of the central historical, cultural, political and religious forces that have shaped both American community and the American understanding of community are examined. These questions are initially approached from an historical perspective with an assessment of philosophical ideas which were dominant in the political thinking of the American founders. The seminar then considers the historical development of those ideas in light of the way they are concretized in political practice, arriving at an assessment of contemporary American thinking on community. Feminisms and Philosophies of Difference

McGill, Cherie

What does it mean to call oneself (or someone else) a 'feminist'? In attempting an answer to this question, we will consider efforts to reveal, unravel, and remedy the conceptual, psychological, and economic dimensions of the oppression of women. We will discuss a variety of feminisms--liberal, existential, radical--and their differing approaches to such 'feminist' issues as marriage and domestic violence, reproduction and pregnancy, work and sexual harassment, and the science of gender and gender difference. We will examine the relationship of sexism to racism, heterosexism, and class exploitation, and investigate the role of the concept of difference in creating and maintaining structural inequalities.

Comparative Philosophy and the Idea of the Self

Johnson, David W

Fall 2024

This course examines two ideas that seem fundamentally opposed to one another: the reality of the self and the doctrine of no-self. We explore this issue by comparing the ideas of Nishida Kitar and Kimura Bin two modern Japanese philosophers whose work has been shaped by Buddhist thought with the work of Western theorists of the self such as Ulric Neisser, Dan Zahavi, Shaun Gallagher, Evan Thompson, and Dorothe Legrand. Through these comparisons we consider the question of whether it may be possible to reconcile claims about the reality of the self with a particular account of the ontology of selfless states. How to Begin Thinking: Aftermaths of Twentieth-Century Literature, Philosophy, History
Newmark, Kevin

Fall 2024

Conducted in English: Undergraduate Elective. Cross listed with English and Philosophy
"Thinking," the French philosopher Emmanuel Levinas once suggested, "probably begins through traumatisms." This course will study a series of disruptive and transformative events that have indelibly marked the twentieth century. What is the task of thinking for a European tradition displaced internally by the Holocaust and externally by the end of colonial expansions into other continents? Authors will include Levinas, Derrida, Nancy, Saussure, Barthes, Duras (in English translation from French); Borges and Dorfman (in English and English translation from Spanish); Calvino (in English translation from Italian); and Descartes (in English translation from Latin). A German component (in English translation) will consider Husserl and Heidegger as a counterpoint to the European tradition of Romance languages, literatures, and cultures.

Friendship

Gurtler, Gary, SJ

Fall 2024

The renewed interest among philosophers about friendship indicates a break from the suspicion of the last several centuries. The lack of interest can be traced to an understanding of human nature where each individual is a self-contained unit. Ethical reflection emphasized equality so much that friendship appeared hard to justify, as based on preferring one individual over another. This has not always been the case, since Greek and Medieval thinkers regarded friendship rather highly as indicating what is best in human nature and essential to happiness. We will try to understand why different cultural perspectives evaluate friendship in different ways.

Freud and Philosophy

Rumble, Vanessa P

Fall 2024

The course is designed to acquaint students with the scope and evolution of Freud's thinking and with significant developments in psychoanalysis since his time. Students will study and assess Freud's and Breuer's first formulation of the nature of hysteria; Freud's groundbreaking work in dream interpretation and the nature of unconscious processes; Freud's attempt to apply his novel theory of unconscious mechanisms to cultural anthropology as well as individual psychology; and the implications of the ongoing revisions in Freud's classification of the drives. Above all, we'll focus on Freud's attempt, over the course of many years, to account for the origin of human morality and guilt, and his ongoing assessment of the role of Judaism in his life and in his culture.

Introduction to Schopenhauerian Pessimism

Rivera Castro, Juan C, Society of Jesus

Fall 2024

Is this world set up to make us miserable? Is this the worst of all possible worlds? Does any good that we experience compensate for any evil suffered? Can any philosophical account of reality be worth our time if it does not address the unspeakable sufferings of mankind? These are some of the questions that this course will explore. This introduction to Schopenhauers pessimism aims to familiarize the students with Schopenhauers argument for philosophical pessimism, their scope, limitations and how they provide a philosophical answer to important existential questions regarding suffering, guilt, death, and holiness. Schopenhauerian pessimism, this course argues, is not a depressed description of reality, but a deep source of liberation, a medicine against apathy and boredom. We will read all the major sections of The World as Will and Representation, Parerga and Paralipomena and Manuscript Remains dedicated to the different elements that form Schopenhauerian pessimism. As preparation to engage Schopenhauers texts, we will read chapters from Frederick Beisers Weltschmerz: Pessimism in German Philosophy, 1800-1900 to familiarize the student with some key elements from Schopenhauers epistemology and metaphysics. At the end of the course, the student will be able to present the major arguments for Schopenhauerian pessimism, apply it to different existential situations and discern what elements of it can be retained. Satisfies the following distribution requirement(s) for Philosophy: History of Philosophy, Knowledge & Reality.

Mahayana Buddhism: Thought and Practice

Vale, Matthew

Fall 2024

This course explores Mahayana Buddhist thought, meditation practice, narrative, and ritual practice across Asia. We consider texts ancient and modern. After a basic introduction to Buddhism, we take up topics ranging from meditation, to compassion, nirvana, emptiness, Buddha nature, Zen, and Mahayana Buddhist ethics. Our focus is on fundamental theological questions: What are the causes of suffering? How can meditation and ethical practices illuminate sufferings causes, and put an end to them? What is the state of unconditioned awareness, freedom, and joy that lies beyond suffering? Most importantly, what does this all have to do with me? No background in Buddhism is required.

Modern Philosophy

Solere, Jean-Luc

Fall 2024

From the early 17 th to the end of the 18 th century, reason asserted its autonomy and triumphed in the Age of Enlightenment, but at the same time reflected on its own limits. Through a series of themes and problems, the course presents the major philosophies (roughly, from Descartes to Kant) that have accompanied the development of scientific knowledge, the rise of the modern mind, and the transformation of Western societies. This comprehensive survey covers metaphysics, epistemology, ethics, and political philosophy, paying attention to the interconnection between ideas in these different domains (with for instance the centrality of the notion of law: laws of nature, political laws, moral law). It particularly highlights the logical development in the succession of questions and answers that characterize the evolution of philosophy in the modern times. The course will provide you with the central concepts of modern thought, so as to grasp the bases of today understanding of the world and of ourselves. Analysis of representative texts, class discussions, and writing assignments are designed to develop rigorous argumentation and expression skills. Philosophy of Law

Berger, Christopher D

This course aims to provide an overview of a number of core debates in contemporary philosophy of law. The primary concern will be to examine the relation between legal validity and the moral normativity of the law, that is, answers to the questions 'What is the law?' and 'Is there a (moral) duty to obey the law?' In addition to these more general questions, we will focus on several more specific questions pertaining to constitutionalism, including 'What is the relationship between a constitution and the rule of law?', 'What is the ground of judicial review?' and 'What connection, if any, is there between questions of legal theory and broader debates in contemporary political philosophy?'

Metaphysics

Fall 2024

The course begins with classical modern philosophers. Their problems concern the relation of mind and body, the possibility of objective knowledge, and cause and effect. Their method is that of science, combining both empirical and logical elements. After these modern thinkers, giving our cultural assumptions, we turn to Ancient and Medieval philosophers. Their problems concern the relation of spirit and matter, the analogy of being and truth, and causal explanation. Their method is one of dialogue. With this different set of problems and method, we will be able to evaluate the relative strengths of these different philosophical positions.

Muldoon, Timothy P

Fall 2024

Seniors only. Capstone classes may NOT be taken Pass/Fail. You may take only ONE Capstone class before graduation. First, the course will involve careful reflection on the sifting and pruning of desires. It will introduce philosophical reflection on desire from ancient Greece to modern philosophy, paying particular attention to the Ignatian tradition of discernment of spirits. Second, it will invite particular reflection on our relationships, and the desires that we have for the relationships we seek to cultivate over the course of our lives. Third, it will invite students to reflect on their experiences of work and preparation for a career, asking how their Boston College education has formed them. Fourth, we will reflect on our citizenship within communities: family, local community, society, nation, and world.

Environmental Ethics: Value of Nature/Nature of Value

McCoy, Marina B

Fall 2024

This course has theoretical and practical sides. Theoretically, it is an inquiry into value theory in general, and the value of (nonhuman) nature in particular. We will examine positions on the moral standing of nonhumans, such as anthropocentrism, animal rights and welfare, biocentrism, and ecocentrism. Practically, we will explore the social, political, economic, and ethical dimensions of environmental issues such as food, consumerism, climate change, energy, and sustainability. Our animating questions are: What are our duties to the natural world? How would our civilization have to change to meet these duties?

PHIL558901Karl Jaspers Reading the Great Philosophers*Basile, Giovanni Pietro, Society of Jesus*Fall 2024

In 1957, Karl Jaspers published Die groen Philosophen, a work collecting his interpretation of some of the foremost thinkers of all time. The book was translated into English in 1962 under the title The Great Philosophers, edited by Hannah Arendt. Taking this work as a starting point, but also referring to other writings by Jaspers, the seminar aims to analyze the Jaspersian interpretation of the thought of the following authors: Plato, Plotinus, Agustin, Anselm, Cusano, Descartes, and Spinoza. The intent is, moreover, to highlight the influence of these thinkers on Karl Jaspers' philosophy of existence and metaphysics. PHIL589901The Concept of the Tragic in 20th Century Philosophy*Basile, Giovanni Pietro, SJ*Fall 2024

The course aims to explore the notion of the tragic as a philosophical concept. While ancient tragedy is characterized by the compassion aroused by the suffering of the tragic hero and the fear aroused by tragic theology, the idea of a wicked god disappears quite early. In contemporary philosophy, the notion of the tragic will be increasingly linked to the drama of freedom, the finitude and absurdity of the human condition, and the pessimistic worldview. The course will take place in the form of a seminar and will especially deal with the philosophy of the 20th Century. The following authors (and texts) will be read: Unamuno (The Tragic Sense of Life), Scheler (On the Tragic), Camus ("On the Future of Tragedy", The Myth of Sisyphus and The Rebel), Benjamin (The Origin of German Tragic Drama), C. Schmitt (Hamlet or Hecuba: The Intrusion of Time into the Play), Jaspers (Tragedy is not enough), Ricur ("The Wicked God and the Tragic Vision of Existence").

The Problem of Suffering

Bloechl, Jeffrey

Fall 2024

This course approaches the theme of suffering as a challenge to phenomenology and Christian theology. Suffering is distinguished from pain, and explored in relation to various modes of meaning-giving. Extended attention is given to the possibility of meaningless suffering, with reference to medical literature and the testimony of victims of the Shoah. The theme of meaningless suffering resists phenomenological interpretation and challenges Christian theodicy. Authors studied will include the book of Job, Augustine, Leibniz, Nietzsche, Husserl, Levinas, and P. Levi.

Medieval Christian Mystical Philosophy: Eriugena, Eckhart, Cusanus

Moran, Dermot

Fall 2024

In this course, I plan to read key texts in the Christian Neoplatonic mystical tradition, focusing in particular on Johannes Scottus Eriugena (c. 800-877), Meister Eckhart of Hochheim (1260-1328), and Nicholas of Cusa (1401-1464). The class will begin with readings from St. Augustine and Dionysius the Areopagite, the two most influential figures for medieval Christian Platonism. We shall then read sections of Eriugena's Periphyseon and Homily on the Prologue to St. John's Gospel, selections from Eckhart's sermons and tracts, and parts of Nicholas of Cusa's On Learned Ignorance and De li non aliud (On God as Not Other). The course will consider the Neoplatonic context, affirmative and negative theology, and the nature of the human being in the context of the dialectics of knowledge and ignorance, immanence, and transcendence.

Plato and Socrates

Wians, William R

Fall 2024

In having Socrates declare, The unexamined life is not worth living (*Apology*38a5-6), Plato presents his teacher as an example for others to follow, not just in what he thought and said, but in how he lived and even in how he died. But following Socrates example proves difficult and not just in facing death. Many dialogues feature characters who try in various ways to imitate Socrates but who enjoy limited success at best. Some of these failures are comic, certainly all are instructive. But what lessons does Plato teach about a man who claimed to teach nothing? Put differently, what would an examined life look like? How does one live an examined life in practice? To begin to answer these questionsquestions that should be urgent for anyone hoping to lead a good lifewe can do no better than to look at Socrates own activities as recorded by Plato (Socrates himself wrote nothing). Students will encounter Socrates primarily through a series of philosophical dialogues, including seemingly inconclusive dialogues along with several Platonic masterpieces.

PHIL772101Medieval Ontology*Solere, Jean-Luc*Fall 2024

We will study how Neo-Platonism and Aristotelism dialogued, argued, merged, parted in medieval metaphysics, especially in Aquinas's, Scotus's and Ockham's thought, during the 13th and 14th centuries. We will analyze fundamental concepts such as being, form and matter, substance and accident, essence and existence, individuation, participation, creation, etc. The class is especially designed for giving graduate students a strong and in-depth presentation of medieval thought, an essential moment of the development of western philosophy.

PHIL782001

Phenomenology of Religion

Kearney, Richard

Fall 2024

This seminar discusses the phenomenological approach to religion in two parts. The first analyses the application of phenomenology to the God question in Husserl, Heidegger, Levinas and Ricoeur. The second engages the famous 'theological turn in phenomenology' manifest in the work of Derrida, Caputo and Kristeva and issuing in the atheist-anatheist debate.

The Challenge of Justice

Snyder, Joshua R

Spring 2025

This course introduces the student to the principal understandings of justice that have developed in the Western philosophical and theological traditions. Care is taken to relate the theories to concrete, practical and political problems, and to develop good reasons for choosing one way of justice rather than another. The relationship of justice to the complementary notion of peace will also be examined. Special attention is paid to the contribution of Catholic theology in the contemporary public conversation about justice and peace. Problems discussed may include human rights, hunger and poverty, and ecological justice.

Perspectives on Art II: Crisis, Courage, and Creativity

Rumble, Vanessa P

Spring 2025

In the attempt to think through what is real, and in response to social and intellectual crises, philosophy elaborates ever new ways to see and understand our world. Philosophy, then, is always a call to courage and creativity. In this year-long course on philosophy, we study the history of western philosophy, keeping an eye on the way in which philosophy comports itself in relation to the bodily and the sensual and in relation to art and beauty. We begin the spring semester with a study of Immanuel Kant's ethics, turning then to his theory of art. What is the feeling of beauty all about? Is aesthetic taste wholly subjective, or just the opposite? Afterwards, we look at Hegel's and Goethe's bold attempts to overcome the alienation between appearances and ultimate reality that was posited by Kant. We close by asking whether art has the power to change not only how we see, but also how we live, both individually and in community. James Baldwin and Toni Morrison bring these issues home.

The American Divide: The Philosophy of Inequality

McGill, Cherie

Spring 2025

This is an Enduring Question course and is open to FRESHMEN only. You must take both ECON1703 and PHIL1711. How should we interpret our nation's persistent inequalities when our founding documents assert the equality of all? Concern over inequality in the U.S. has shown itself in movements like Occupy Wall Street, the Fight for a Fifteen Dollar Minimum Wage, and Black Lives Matter, and has become even more of a focus since the COVID-19 pandemic. These paired courses will examine the meaning, causes, and consequences of inequality from the perspectives of economics and philosophy. Providing a broad picture of the current state of the U.S. economy and analyzing the role of economic policy in determining opportunities and outcomes, these courses will prepare students to develop their own views about how past economic choices have shaped current economic realities and how we might create a more equitable future.

Perspectives on War, Aggression, and Conflict Resolution I

Johnson, Spencer K

Spring 2025

The Faith, Peace, and Justice Program at Boston College sponsors this course as an introduction to the field of Peace Studies.. This course asks: Is it ever ethical to go to war? Is it possible to be ethical in war? And, what does ethical conflict resolution look like? This course investigates these questions primarily using the resources of the Christian theological tradition and the social sciences, as well as engaging with philosophy and film. Special attention will be paid to issues in contemporary warfare and the challenges and promises of peacebuilding.

Do Robots Have Souls?

Kruger, Matthew C

Spring 2025

Do robots have souls? Probably not. But this course thinks its a good question, and therefore explores our fundamental thinking of technology and the ways in which it overlaps with religious and philosophical thinking of animal, inanimate object, technical object, and human. The philosophic core is found in the work of Gilbert Simondon, Martin Heidegger, and Nishida Kitaro, focusing particularly on Simondons re-envisioning of the relationship between religion and technology through art and philosophy. After this core, we turn to art, movies, and novels, to explore transhumanism, posthumanism, the threat of AI, and the possibility of human and machine harmony.

Medieval Women Philosophers

Boor Mulcahey, Kelsey

Spring 2025

This course studies the philosophical thought of medieval women (e.g. Hildegard of Bingen, Catherine of Siena, Julian of Norwich, Christine de Pizan, etc.). While usually not labeled "philosophers," their thought contributes to and enriches perennial philosophical conversations. Although many of these writers are contemporaries of more famous medieval thinkers, their backgrounds, educations, audiences, and modes of discourse are often quite different. Studying them gives us a broader grasp and a deeper understanding of the medieval perspective. By the end of this course students will understand the views of important medieval women on self-knowledge, reason, love, persons, and immortality. Everybody's Working for the Weekend: Ambition and Alienation

Rojcewicz, Christine

Spring 2025

This course will propose an answer to the following question: Why does it seem like some people are more ambitious than others? On the surface, those with what appears to be a natural drive to succeed seem to become more affluent. That is to say, some people appear to embrace hustle culture, or the idea that any time spent not making money is wasted time, while others are drawn toward a trend identified around 2021 as quiet quitting, that is to say, they refuse to devote more time and energy to their work than is absolutely necessary to avoid losing their jobs. Why is this apparent lack of ambition and motivation so prevalent? Can we blame mere laziness? This question will be answered with a resounding no. Rather, this class will show that there are indeed systematic measures in place that cause some to not appear as motivated as others. In order to work through this answer, this class will look at alienation and capitalism. This course will address the effects of systemic racism, automation and AI, environmental concerns, generational trends, and the COVID-19 pandemic on ones ambition to succeed in the workforce. This course will combine philosophical readings from Marx, Weber, Arendt, and others with contemporary business case studies.

Greek Philosophy

Byers, Sarah C

Spring 2025

This course is organized around the central philosophical questions asked and answered by philosophers in the ancient Greek-speaking world. Topics include theories of material bodies, change and time, elemental physics, and entities and their predicates; whether anything immaterial or immutable exists and, if so, its relation to the changing cosmos; the existence and nature of God or gods; the existence and nature of the human soul and its relation to the human body; the criterion of truth and the nature of language; the criterion of ethics; theories of animal and human cognition and motivation. We will consider Plato, Aristotle, and, more briefly, some pre-Socratic and post-Aristotelian authors such as Plutarch, Epictetus, and Plotinus.

Friendship

Boor Mulcahey, Kelsey

Spring 2025

The renewed interest among philosophers about friendship indicates a break from the suspicion of the last several centuries. The lack of interest can be traced to an understanding of human nature where each individual is a self-contained unit. Ethical reflection emphasized equality so much that friendship appeared hard to justify, as based on preferring one individual over another. This has not always been the case, since Greek and Medieval thinkers regarded friendship rather highly as indicating what is best in human nature and essential to happiness. We will try to understand why different cultural perspectives evaluate friendship in different ways.

Spanish-American Philosophy

Gurtler, Gary, SJ

Spring 2025

This course is designed to give the student an opportunity to look at some fundamental philosophical issues regarding human nature and the origins and development of human thought from a fresh perspective. Unamuno's Tragic Sense of Life presents a critique of the rationalism of modern European thought by focusing on human life as dream, theater, and struggle in line with Don Quijote. Paz's The Labyrinth of Solitude explores the meaning of human existence through the lens, or perhaps the mask, of the Mexican quest for identity. Ortega y Gasset and Zubiri represent the contemporary Spanish interaction with European phenomenology.

Approaches to the Philosophy of Religion: Historical, Phenomenological, Hermeneutic, and Analytic

Floyd, Gregory P

Spring 2025

This course examines four approaches in the philosophy of religion: historical investigation, phenomenology, hermeneutics, and analytic philosophy. In examining these approaches, we will consider key terms including faith, reason, religion, belief, philosophy, theology, and god(s), as well as contemporary philosophers working in these fields including Alasdair MacIntyre, Robert Sokolowski, Merold Westphal, W. K. Clifford, W. James, N. Wolterstorff and others. The course will consider questions such as: What are faith and reason and are they compatible? Does religion require people to believe irrational things? Can a religious person be more and less reasonable in her belief, or is all religious belief equal, private, and, therefore, arbitrary? How can we think about ethical commitment within and outside of religious commitment? Satisfies the following distribution requirement(s) for Philosophy: Knowledge & Reality, History of Philosophy.

Self & Community

Muldoon, Timothy P

Spring 2025

This course invites students to discern their insights--that is, the ways that they come to knowledge--for the sake of building a good life and a good world. It is based on Bernard Lonergan's "heuristic method," a method of discovery of the inner structures of our understanding that shape our ability to make sense of the world. In the first part of the course, students will engage in exercises that help them in the process of what Lonergan calls "self-appropriation," taking hold of oneself and one's intelligence. In the second part, students will work together to use what they've learned for the sake of developing a project that aims at some social good. Guest lecturers from different disciplines and fields will help name the various ways that reflective intelligence can contribute to a community of growth, healing the world's ills and creating new avenues of progress.

PHIL500501

Medieval Philosophy

Solere, Jean-Luc

Spring 2025

Far from being monolithic and repetitive, the Middle Ages were a creative period during which multiple solutions were tried to make sense of the world and of human life. The legacy of Antiquity, the philosophic and scientific knowledge of the time, and religious views were combined in original syntheses. The aim of the course is to provide a picture of this diversity, through a study of the main problems that a wide range of authors (Christian thinkers from St. Augustine to Ockham, but also Islamic and Jewish philosophers) faced. Medieval philosophy was an important step in the development of human thought. Discovering it will be essential to your philosophical education. This course will especially highlight the ideas, in metaphysics, theory of knowledge, and ethics, which medieval thinkers created and transmitted to modern philosophy. In addition, analysis of texts, debates, and writing assignments will help you to develop rigorous argumentation and expression skills. (NB: This course was previously offered as PHIL 4407; you cannot take it if you took PHIL 4407)

PHIL523001The Interior Life*Barrette, Andrew*Spring 2025

This course will investigate the meaning of an interior life in order to find a way into it. For this, our guides will be Jesuit philosophers, from the 16th century unto present day. With them, we will ask questions about the role of philosophy in our lives, questions about how best to live, about how best to make the decisions and to carry out actions. The main goals of the course are to gain knowledge of the history of philosophy in the Jesuit tradition and to gain self-knowledge along with this tradition. Satisfies the following distribution requirement(s) for Philosophy: Ethics & Values.

PHIL524001Figures in Analytic Philosophy*Larrey, Philip*Spring 2025

This course treats the development of Anglo-American philosophy during the 20th century, in which the philosophical current of thought known as Analytical philosophy took shape and was developed in the United Kingdom and the United States. The core interest of this course represents an epistemological study of the major themes of analytic philosophy from the consideration of three of the most important authors during the twentieth century: W. V. Quine, Donald Davidson, and Hilary Putnam. Following the historical development of analytic thought, we will try to highlight the problems around the concept of truth to demonstrate the primarily metaphysical interest of the authors, as well as of the entire contemporary analytic school.

Liberalism and its Critics

Fried, Charles G

Spring 2025

In this course we will make an expansive inquiry into the meaning of liberalism as a social and political philosophy, considering the critiques of liberalism made by both the conventionally identified Right, such as Schmitt and Heidegger, and Left, such as Marx and in critical theory. We will focus partially on the American variant of liberalism, with its roots in Locke and the Founding, and also examine contemporary events in the light of the ideas and arguments we will study. Other authors will include de Tocqueville and Cortés on individualism and authoritarianism, Frederick Douglass and Charles Mills on race, Martha Nussbaum and Judith Butler on gender, and others.

Capstone: Working, Playing, Being

Storey, David E

Spring 2025

Capstone classes may NOT be taken Pass/Fail. You may take only ONE Capstone class before graduation. Seniors only.. The conventional wisdom is that BC student culture is "work hard, play hard." But what do we mean by "work" and "play" here? How do these implicit meanings reflect broader cultural forces? And do these meanings serve us well? Senior year is an exciting but anxious time, and this seminar is a chance for you to: (a) reflect on how your education has shaped you, and how you have shaped your education and (b) explore your goals, fears, hopes, and expectations around life post-graduation with a small group of peers. We will examine: (1) the meaning of, and relationship between, work and leisure in your own life; (2) how they have developed since your freshman year in light of your education at BC and; (3) how they figure into your vision of a fulfilling life.

Capstone: A Life Well Lived

DeChiara-Quenzer, Deborah

Spring 2025

Capstone classes may NOT be taken Pass/Fail. You may take only ONE Capstone class before graduation. Seniors only.. This course engages students in serious reflection on what it means to have "a life well lived." It is advantageous to do this reflection at this time in your life, as it affords you time and opportunity to shape your life going forward. What kind of life do you hope to live? What will bring you peace and satisfaction--dare we say, even happiness? Students will be asked to examine themselves by looking both backwards and forwards in many dimensions of their lives (education, ethics, relationships, career, etc.) while learning what others have said about having a meaningful life.

Philosophy of Imagination

Kearney, Richard

Spring 2025

Readings in the philosophy of imagination from ancient myth to post-modernity. Beginning with Biblical and Greek accounts of images and image-making, this course will explore three main paradigm shifts in the Western history of imagination: (1) the ancient paradigm of the Mirror (Plato to Augustine); (2) the modern paradigm of the Lamp (Kant to Sartre); and (3) the postmodern paradigm of the circular Looking Glass (Lacan to Derrida). The course will conclude with a critical evaluation of the political and ethical functions of imagination in our contemporary civilization of cyber fantasy, simulation, and spectacle.

Selected Readings in Phenomenology

Moran, Dermot

Spring 2025

This course offers a critical introduction to phenomenology, one of the most important movements of twentieth-century European philosophy, including its French existentialist development, and its critics. The major themes and movements in phenomenology and existentialism will be studied through several key thinkers: Franz Brentano, Edmund Husserl, Martin Heidegger, Edith Stein, Maurice Merleau-Ponty, Jean-Paul Sartre, Emmanuel Levinas. Themes that will be critically considered include: intentionality, phenomenological description, perception and embodiment, moods and emotions, self-consciousness, the nature of the self, sociality and the surrounding lifeworld. The course will have both a historical and a critical orientation with an emphasis on reading selected primary-source texts in English translation.

Capstone: Poets, Philosophers, and Mapmakers

McNellis, Paul W, SJ

Spring 2025

We go through life with mental maps of reality in various degrees, implicit or explicit. A liberal arts education presupposes such a map of the intelligible world. Is it accurate? What does your map of reality look like? How has it changed since freshman year? The goal of the seminar is to help you see what kind of map you implicitly have now and to begin to ask what you want the map to look like ten years after graduation. How do you develop an open rather than closed map?

Kant: Philosophy As System and Critique

Basile, Giovanni Pietro, Society of Jesus

Spring 2025

The course covers two fundamental aspects of Kant's critical philosophy. The first is the architectonic of Kant's system of transcendental philosophy, which includes not only the three Critiques but also his metaphysics of nature and his metaphysics of morals. The second aspect concerns Kant's conception of the history of pure reason and the role of his critical philosophy in this history. These analyses will highlight a tension within Kant's thought between the claim to realize definitive systems and the critique that implies overcoming any historically given system.

Spring 2025

In this course, we will read and discuss Hegel's Philosophy of Subjective Spirit from the 1830 Encyclopedia of Philosophical Sciences in Outline. We will proceed by situating Hegel's concept of Geist(spirit) in its own philosophical and historical context. Then, we will concentrate on the main themes of Philosophy of Subjective Spirit, namely anthropology, phenomenology (a shorter and different version than the 1807 Phenomenology of Spirit), and psychology. Special attention will be given to Hegel's account of feeling, thinking, and acting, drawing --where appropriate-- on contemporary resources and literature.

Spring 2025

In this course we examine questions in epistemology, ethics and metaphysics using major works of Augustine (354-430 AD/CE), supplemented by works of contemporary philosophers on related themes (Kretzmann, Matthews, MacDonald, VanInwagen). We will aim at depth of understanding and breadth of knowledge, contextualizing Augustine as a philosopher of late antiquity in dialogue with the Hellenistic schools (Stoicism, Skepticism, Neo-Platonism) whose philosophy is still of interest today. Topics include the nature of faith, skepticism, the problem of evil, the nature of God, moral development and conversion, the origin and characteristics of the natural world, including the human soul and body.

Heidegger: Art, Truth, and Technology

Sallis, John

Spring 2025

This course will present an analysis of Heidegger's originary concept of truth as disclosedness. It will consider the way in which Heidegger's innovative concept provides the basis for understanding the nature of art and the impact of technology on modern society. Attention will be given to such texts as Being and Time, The Origin of the Work of Art, and The Essence of Technology.

Platonic Cosmology

Gurtler, Gary, SJ

Spring 2025

The purpose of this course is twofold: to explore Platonic considerations of cosmology in the Timaeus; and to investigate Plotinus major study of the soul's relation to the sensible cosmos in IV 3-5 [27-29]. The Timaeus first describes the generation of the cosmos, with special attention to the four elements and their relation to the possibility of sensation. Fire and earth, for example, produce the motions that make things visible and tangible, with air and water as proportions that help connect things together (31b-34a). The next part concerns the relation of soul to body, its presence throughout the body, and the location of its powers in specific parts of the body.

PHIL755201

Phenomenology of the Self as Cross-Cultural Philosophy

Johnson, David W

Spring 2025

This course explores the question of the self from a phenomenological and cross-cultural standpoint. We examine the notion of self as experiential dimension in Husserl, Heidegger, Sartre, and Merleau-Ponty and consider objections to this concept found in contemporary Buddhist philosophers such as Albahari, Garfield, Dreyfus, and Siderits. A side-by-side explication of the ideas of each of these thinkers will allow us to explore the question of whether it may be possible to reconcile the core experiential self of phenomenology with a particular ontology of selfless states.. Satisfies the following distribution requirement(s) for Philosophy: Modern.

Reading Jacques Derrida

Newmark, Kevin

Spring 2025

This course will examine some of the fundamental ways that the work of Jacques Derrida has contributed to altering the context in which the humanities can be understood and studied within the modern university. It will take examples from Derridas repeated interventions in such disciplines as literature, philosophy, theology, and history. By situating Derridas work at the margins where accepted demarcations between the disciplines begin to blur, the course will suggest new possibilities for conducting interdisciplinary work in the future.

PHIL778801

Aristotle's Metaphysics

Wians, William R

Spring 2025

The course will be devoted to one of the rarest, most excellent, and most difficult philosophical texts ever written. Aristotle's Metaphysics presents a profound and profoundly influential answer to the question What is being? But even apart from his answer, the Philosopher reveals his greatness as a thinker by the way he approaches the question of being: what does the question pre-suppose? What does it imply for nature, knowledge and language? How can the question of being be answered when all we experience are individual beings?

Medieval Theories of Mind and Cognition

Solere, Jean-Luc

Spring 2025

How and what do we perceive? How does one form concepts? Who is the thinking subject? What do we know? This class will offer the opportunity to examine central issues of medieval philosophy: sense perception, realism versus representationalism, nature of the intellect, abstraction process, semantics and concepts. Through the study of some landmark thinkers, such as Avicenna, Averroes, Aquinas, Scotus, Ockham, we will observe the apparition of the modern conceptions of the cognitive subject and of knowledge. The course is especially designed for giving graduate students a strong and in-depth presentation of an essential moment of the development of medieval thought.
